buildings.

During the drill, emergency response teams were activated to assess the situation, initiate evacuation procedures, and provide assistance to individuals with disabilities or special needs. First aid stations were set up to provide medical assistance to simulated casualties, and communication channels were tested to ensure effective coordination among response teams.

Evaluation and Debriefing:

Feedback was solicited from participants to gather insights into their experiences and observations during the drill.

Key Findings and Recommendations:

The mock drill revealed several areas for improvement, including the need for clearer communication protocols, enhanced training for emergency response teams, and better coordination with external emergency services. Recommendations were made to update the disaster response plan, conduct regular drills and training exercises, and establish a system for ongoing evaluation and improvement of emergency preparedness efforts.

Conclusion:

The mock drill for disaster response at St. Wilfred's College of Arts, Commerce and Science served as a valuable learning experience and an important step towards strengthening the college's readiness for emergencies. By identifying strengths and weaknesses in the current disaster management procedures, the drill provided insights that will inform future efforts to enhance the safety and well-being of students, faculty, and staff during emergencies. Continued training, planning, and collaboration are essential to ensuring a prompt and effective response to potential disasters in the college community.
